

EDITORIAL

Academic publishing has been changing rapidly in the recent period. Traditional means of scientific communication through printed copies of academic journals still continue to have its value but electronic versions of academic papers are increasingly influential as they can be reached with speed and convenience formerly unimaginable. Electronic resources have changed the way the academic work is done and laborious searches for references in libraries have been transformed into a few clicks of a keyboard. Our journal too has been trying to keep pace with this development and we have succeeded to list it into Versita and Econlit electronic databases. We hope that this step will help readers access our papers more comfortably and the authors will have greater audience for their results...
