

Let us know you agree to cookies

We use cookies to give you the best online experience. Please let us know if you agree to all of these cookies.

Yes, I agree

No, take me to settings

NEWS

Menu

Asia | China | India

ADVERTISEMENT

South Korea records world's lowest fertility rate again

25 August

AFP

The fertility rate - the number of children born to a woman - has dropped again in South Korea

By Frances Mao

BBC News

South Korea has again recorded the world's lowest fertility rate with the number sinking to a new low.

The rate in the country first dropped lower than one child per woman in 2018.

But on Wednesday, figures released by the government showed the figure had dropped to 0.81 - down from 0.84 the previous year, and a sixth consecutive decline.

In comparison, the average rate across the world's most advanced economies is 1.6 children.

Countries need at least two children per couple - a 2.1 rate - to keep their population at the same size, without migration.

Fertility rates have "declined markedly" in the past six decades says the OECD - Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

- Alarm as South Korea sees more deaths than births
- From Seoul: 'Why I never want babies'

But the trend has been particularly pronounced in South Korea, where family sizes have reduced in the span of a few generations. At the start of the 1970s women had four children on average.

A declining population can put a country under immense strain. Apart from increased pressure on public spending as demand for healthcare systems and pensions rise, a declining youth population also leads to labour shortages that impact the economy.

In 2020 there was widespread alarm in South Korea when it recorded more deaths than births for the first time.

In recent years, economic pressures and career factors have been key considerations for people deciding on children, experts say.

For the 2021 figures, experts cited higher living costs, a spike in house prices and the impact of the Covid pandemic as factors discouraging them from having children.

Analysis By Jean Mackenzie Seoul correspondent

A crisis is brewing. If South Korea's population continues to shrink, there won't be enough people to grow its economy, look after its aging population, and conscript into its army.

Politicians have known for years this is coming but have been unable to fix it. They have thrown billions of dollars at trying to convince people to have children and are still scratching their heads as to why this hasn't worked.

Money of course is a factor. Raising children in South Korea is expensive, and many young people are sinking under astronomical housing costs. But this is also about opportunity.

Women in South Korea are highly educated, yet far from equal in the workplace. The country has the highest gender pay gap of any rich country. Most of the housework and childcare in South Korea still falls to women and it is common for women to stop work after having children or for their careers to stagnate.

Essentially, many women here are still forced to choose between having a career and having a family. Increasingly they are deciding they don't want to sacrifice their careers.

As one woman put it to me: "we are on a baby-making strike".

More on this story

'Why I never want babies'

16 August 2018

Alarm as South Korea sees more deaths than births

4 January 2021

Related Topics

Fertility

South Korea

Top Stories

Bodies and burned buildings: Inside liberated Lyman

5 hours ago

Ukraine makes breakthrough in south against Russia

5 hours ago

North Korea fires ballistic missile over Japan

11 minutes ago

ADVERTISEMENT

BBC
SPORT

Football

Live text coverage,
scores, fixtures
& gossip

Latest News

Features

Bodies and burned buildings: Inside liberated Lyman

Ukraine war in maps: Russia losing more territory

'People smuggling is more lucrative than drugs'

Why EU leaders struggle to agree on gas price cap

Ros Atkins on... Iran protests

Pakistan flood doctors warn of a war with no end

What was Zelensky's Star Wars link? Take our timed quiz...

World's largest Pokémon collection may fetch £300k

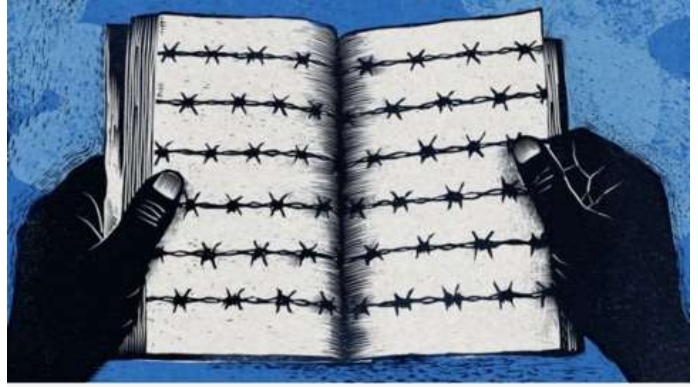

The Indian period drama firing up the box office

Elsewhere on the BBC

Why Gen Z are drinking less

The books too powerful to read

The African city Europeans tried to erase

Most Read

- 1 Bodies and burned buildings: Inside liberated Lyman
- 2 Ukraine makes breakthrough in south against Russia
- 3 Paris joins boycott of World Cup fan zones
- 4 Iran schoolgirls remove hijabs in protests
- 5 EU Parliament votes for common charging cable
- 6 Avalanche hits dozens of climbers on Himalayan peak
- 7 Zelensky and Musk in row over 'peace plan poll'
- 8 Ukraine war in maps: Russia losing more territory
- 9 Questions raised as hundreds win lotto jackpot

10 Lyman retreat sees rare criticism of Russian leaders

BBC News Services

On your mobile

On smart speakers

Get news alerts

Contact BBC News

Home

Sport

Worklife

Future

Music

Weather

News

Reel

Travel

Culture

TV

Sounds

Terms of Use

About the BBC

Privacy Policy

Cookies

Accessibility Help

Parental Guidance

Contact the BBC

Get Personalised Newsletters

Why you can trust the BBC

Advertise with us

AdChoices / Do Not Sell My Info

© 2022 BBC. The BBC is not responsible for the content of external sites. Read about our approach to external linking.