Ex- vztahy - co muži?

The screenshot shows the Adobe Acrobat Reader DC interface. The title bar reads 'Athenstaedt_Men View Their Partners More Favorably Than Women Do.pdf - Adobe Acrobat Reader DC'. The menu bar includes 'Soubor', 'Úpravy', 'Zobrazení', 'Okna', and 'Nápověda'. The toolbar shows various navigation and editing tools. The main content area displays the article title 'Men View Their Ex-Partners More Favorably Than Women Do' in large bold font. Below the title, the authors are listed: 'Ursula Athenstaedt¹, Hilmar Brohmer¹, Jeffry A. Simpson², Sandra Müller¹, Nina Schindling¹, Adam Bacik³, and Paul A. M. Van Lange³'. The journal information is 'Social Psychological and Personality Science, 2020, Vol. 11(4) 483-491, © The Author(s) 2019'. The abstract text reads: 'Our research deals with the question how people look back at their ex-partners—those with whom they were once romantically involved? Such views are important because they may shape our views of current relationships or new (potential) partners. Across three studies (total $N = 876$), we find that men hold more positive attitudes towards their female ex-partners than women do towards their male ex-partners. Gender-related variables provide further insight into this phenomenon. Ex-partner attitudes correlated positively with more permissive sexual attitudes and the amount of social support that individuals perceived from their ex-partners (both higher in men), whereas the ex-partner attitudes correlated negatively with attributions of greater responsibility for the breakup to ex-partner or relationship itself (both higher in women). Both men and women reported more positive ex-partner attitudes if they were single or had lower breakup acceptance.' The 'Keywords' section is partially visible at the bottom. On the right side, there is a sidebar with search and action options like 'Exportovat PDF', 'Vytvořit PDF', 'Upravit PDF', etc. The Windows taskbar at the bottom shows the time as 12:41 on 08.04.2020.

Abstract

Our research deals with the question how people look back at their ex-partners—those with whom they were once romantically involved? Such views are important because they may shape our views of current relationships or new (potential) partners. Across three studies (total $N = 876$), we find that men hold more positive attitudes towards their female ex-partners than women do towards their male ex-partners. Gender-related variables provide further insight into this phenomenon. Ex-partner attitudes correlated positively with more permissive sexual attitudes and the amount of social support that individuals perceived from their ex-partners (both higher in men), whereas the ex-partner attitudes correlated negatively with attributions of greater responsibility for the breakup to ex-partner or relationship itself (both higher in women). Both men and women reported more positive ex-partner attitudes if they were single or had lower breakup acceptance.
